(b) There are some opinions in which a man should stand neuter, without engaging his assent to one side or the other. Such a hovering faith as this , which refuses to settle upon any determination is absolutety necessary in a mind that is careful to avoid errors and prepossessions. When the arguments press equally on both sides in matters that are indifferent to us, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither .

(c) I cannot say that the quarrels of men and their wives ever made any great impression upon me, or had much tendency to strengthen me is those anti - social resolutions which I took up long ago upon more substantial consideration. What oftenest offends me in the house of married persons Where I visit , is an em of quite a different description ; it is that they are too loving.

(d) Children love to listen to stories about their elders, When they were childern; to stretch their imagination to the conception of a traditional great-uncle or grandame , whom they never saw. It was in this spirit that my little ones crept about me the other evening to hear about their great grandmother Field, who lived in a great house in Norfolk.

(e) I may be as uncivil as I may please and the law will protect me against violent retaliation . I may be haughty or boorish and their is no penalty to pay except the penalty of being writing down an ill mannered fellow. The law does not compel me to say 'please' or to attune my voice to other people's sensibilities any more then it says that I shall not wax my moustache or dye my hair or wear ringlets down my back.

(f) As we see some grounds that have long lain idle and untilled, when grown rich and fertile by rest, to abound with and spend their virtue in the product of innumerable sorts of weeds and wild herbs that are unprofitable, and that to make them perform their true office, we are to cultivate and prepare them for such seed as are proper for our service.
